In spite of the lateness of the season

here was a good attendance of visitors at the special service for tourists at

The exercises, which were in charge of Elder C. S. Martin, began promptly at

At the outset of his remarks, Elder Hinckley expialned his remarks, Elder Hinckley expialned that the purpose of the special service for tourists was to allow visitors an opportunity of hearing the organ, and also to satisfy the desire many people had to hear something about the Mormon faith.

Like other Christian faiths the Mormon religion inculcates benevolence, and all the Christian virtues. In matters of belief it differs in some respects

In matters of belief it differs in some respects from the rest of the world, but its fruits are such that its advocates are willing to submit it to the judgment of unblased men anywhere. It was also said that on account of the earnestness of its advocates, the people nestness of its advocates the people were sometimes accused of being nar-

Elder Hinckley stated that the origin

Elder Hinckley stated that the origin of Mormonism, though humble, was marvelous, and bope evidence of its divinity. He then gave a lucid and succinct account of the first vision of Joseph Smith, and the events leading up to it. Also the appearance of the angel Moroni and the revealing of the plates to the boy prophet. The organization of the Church in 1820, and the martyrdom of Joseph Smith in 1844 were also alluded to.

The speaker then bore a tribute of praise to the pioneers who entered the valley 62 years ago. The hardships of the journey, and the difficulties incident to settling the desert wastes were enlarged upon, and the reason for the growth of the Church in spite of all the attacks made upon it, was explained to be not because of the astuteness of a few leaders, but because the work is of God, and this fact is known by every member of the Church in good standing. Because of this fact the work cannot be destroyed.

Some of the beliefs of the Latterday Saints were then touched on. It was said that the Latterday Saints have implicit faith that God is not not proved the contraction of the contra afar off. He hears and answers prayers of his children whom he has placed on the earth for a glorious purpose. Life was said to be but a span in the cycle

Elder Hinckley also touched on the charge of disloyalty which has been urged in some quarters against the Latter-day Saints. He asserted that if any church endorses the government of the United States and believes in of the United States and believes in the men who laid its foundation, it is the Mormon Church. God inspires his children everywhere to accomplish his purposes, and to do good, and many of them have been without the pale of the Church. George Washington and Abraham Lincoln were both sustained by God in their callings.

In conclusion he bore testimony to the fact that faith in God leads to great endeavor, in support of which he instanced the accomplishments of the

The Very Rev. A. R. Calladay Preaches At St. Mark's Cathedral as Its Recently Called Dean.

The new dean of St. Mark's cathedral, the very Rev. A. R. Calladay, preached his first sermon, as pastor. Sunday morning before a large congregation After a fine presentation of Cruickshank's "Communion Service" by the choir, the dean spoke from St. John xx; 21, "As my father has sent me,

He said in part:
This was our Lord's charge to his church on the first Easter morn; and it is his charge to her today. We must work for him and with him, if we would have the blessing of our faith; that is fellowship with him. And our working involves three things: First, we must bear our witness to Christ; to the historic fact of his resurrection, and to its present power. It is not enough to its present power. It is not enough to testify to the fact that he rose years ago. We must testify to the presence to testify to the fact that he rose years ago. We must testify to the presence of the risen Christ in our lives. We must make men conscious of our having ideals and aspirations which are not of this earth, but arise from the fact of our fellowship with Christ.

Next, we must seek to grow in the knowledge of the truth of God, manifested in Christ, that we may take our part in the works of spiritual truining which the Lord has committed to his church. Men must be made to know God as he is, in the beauty of his absolute righteousness and holiness and love. But such knowledge can be gained only by earnest and palmstaking study; and persistent effort to embody what we learn in our lives. Finally we must we learn in our lives. Finally we must remember that to the church is com-mitted the terrible responsibility of re-moving sin. She is commissioned to moving sin. She is commissioned to minister to men the emancipation won by Christ. And this she must do not only through her office, but through the loving touch of her every member, bringing home the message of the Father's almighty love as it reaches out to draw his sinning child back into his fellowship.

Such a task is beyond all human power. But the Master has given it to us.
